

Declaration on Originality and Use of Artificial Intelligence

The author(s) affirm and declare that the manuscript submitted to the International Journal of Legal Research (IJLR) is an original scholarly work reflecting the author's independent intellectual effort, legal research, reasoning, and analysis.

The author(s) further declare that Artificial Intelligence (AI)-based tools, if used at all, have been employed strictly for limited purposes such as language refinement, grammatical correction, or formatting assistance, and have not been used to generate substantive content, legal arguments, analytical reasoning, case law interpretation, or conclusions. The author(s) accept full responsibility for the accuracy, originality, and integrity of the manuscript.

The journal proceeds on the presumption of independent authorship; however, manuscripts that, in the opinion of the editorial board, lack original legal reasoning, doctrinal coherence, or demonstrable application of the author's mind may be rejected at any stage of the editorial process, irrespective of whether the use of AI-generated content can be conclusively established through technical means. Any false declaration, concealment, or misrepresentation regarding the use of AI-generated content shall be treated as ethical misconduct.

The journal reserves the right to reject the manuscript, withdraw acceptance, retract a published article, or take any other appropriate editorial action upon discovery of such misrepresentation, at any stage before or after publication.
